

Within Hailing Distance from Native Home

Soon after the liberation of his country from the Japanese military rule, General Kim Il Sung visited the then Kangson Steel Works before his native home in Mangyongdae which he had so missed during the fierce anti-Japanese war and which was within a hailing distance on the way to the factory.

To add eternal brilliance to his immortal exploits, the Korean people sing Tell, Fork to Mangyongdae, a song of praise for Kim Il Sung.

He made his way to the steel works to listen to the voice of the people and rouse them, and to bring happiness to his people.
