

Changed Landscaping

The following happened when the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited the Central Zoo under renovation.

While looking round the zoo, he paid close attention to its landscaping.

At that time, the zoo was covered with dense forests of such conifers as Metasequoia glyptostroboides, larch and cypress, and such broad-leaved trees as willow and Cornus coreana.

After looking around the green areas of the zoo, Kim Jong Un said: It is good to plant trees of good species sparsely in the pleasure grounds. But in case of the Central Zoo it would be advisable to plant tall trees between animal sheds so that the sheds cannot be seen from each other.

Later, true to his ennobling intention of devotion to provide the people with wonderful cultural living conditions and environment, the officials of the Central Zoo carried out the project to facelift its landscaping to suit its features.
