

No Slightest Inconvenience for Orphans

One February day in 2017, the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited the newly-built Pyongyang Primary School for Orphans.

Making the rounds of several places of the school fully provided with educational environment and living conditions on a high level, he paid close attention to ensuring that the students feel no slightest inconvenience in their living.

In a classroom he sat on a chair and said to the officials that the space between desk drawer and chair was not so enough that well-built children would find it difficult to stretch their legs under the desk.

After estimating the space, he stressed the need to widen it.
