

Correcting Slightest Shortcomings

The following happened when the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited the newly-built Pyongyang Middle School for Orphans.

After learning about what would be used in writing on the blackboard in a classroom, he asked about the issue of supplying water marker pens.

Then, he approached a desk. After pulling a chair, he said the desk and chair were made well in consideration of the ages and constitutional characteristics of orphans. And he stressed the need to set the fixtures and educational facilities of Pyongyang Middle School for Orphans as the standards for those to be provided to other primary and middle schools for orphans across the country.

He stated: Pyongyang Middle School for Orphans is the model and archetype of junior and senior middle schools in our country. In the future, all the junior and senior middle schools across the country should be put on the level of Pyongyang Middle School for Orphans.

That day, he made the rounds of the school for hours with warm affection for the rising generations, and showed meticulous concern for every aspect.
