

Road for the Sake of People

It was one Sunday in August 2018, when the hot summer was at its height.

The respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited a combined livestock farm with a view to providing the people with plenty of meat and milk.

Looking round the superior breed research institute and other places of the farm, he gave advice on how to raise new breeds of pigs, cultivate grasses for feeding the animals and improve the breeds of cattle—the matters related with the development of livestock science and technology.

Then he said: A long spell of hot weather is going on nowadays. Today it is sweltering, but I feel refreshing after looking round the farm. This is the road for the sake of the people, the road which I must follow rain or shine.

This mirrored the ennobling motto and view of the people cherished by Comrade Kim Jong Un, who respects them and finds the worth of his life in devoting his all for their wellbeing.
